The storm lasted till late in the night, but for a time between 6 and 7 o'clock as fierce lightning, as terrific thunder, as heavy rain and as strong winds prevailed as often visits this section of country.

The storm was first observed in the West, where it blackened the sky to dense darkness, only relieved by jagged atreams of vivid fire at intervals. It came onward rapidly, and in five minutes after the ominous signs were first observable the rain was dashing on the earth like particles of solid matter. In a short time hail began to fall mingled with the rain. The stones were as large as bird's eggs, and struck against windows with threatening sharpness.

In the city the damage done was not great. The most serious result was the breaking or loosening, from what cause can only be imagined, of the cross wires in honoring this memorable event, and in returning thans to God for the many
